Acacia Demonstration Gardens

The Conservation District of Southern Nevada in cooperation with the City of Henderson and other community partners has created the Acacia Demonstration Gardens at Acacia Park in Henderson.

The Gardens are a great resource and learning center for the aesthetic display of regionally appropriate plants. The Gardens promote environmental awareness and encourage the enjoyment of the natural beauty of our desert environment.

The Gardens demonstrate conservation practices including proper tree planting and care, erosion control, integrated pest management, and effective irrigation and nutrient management.

A main trail and secondary pathways lead visitor through creative residential landscape designs and specialty gardens.

Interpretive display signs address practices such as composting, nutrient management, water conservation terracing, and wildlife protection.

The Demonstration Gardens show residents how to protect our natural resources and make their yards attractive while saving money.

The Gardens are available to local elementary school students as outdoor science labs to study topics such as soils, urban forestry, and wildlife.

The city of Henderson has donated the land, while the Conservation District of Southern Nevada has helped secure funding, coordinate the construction, and promote the project.

Please visit the Gardens at 50 Casa del Fuego at the corner of Gibson and Las Palmas Entradas.
